

Episcopal Diocese of Atlanta Commission on Human Trafficking Convocation Training Opportunities

Georgia Cares, the single statewide coordinating agency for treatment and care of victims of Domestic Minor Sex Trafficking (DMST), is offering FREE in-depth training for the ten convocations within the Episcopal Diocese of Atlanta throughout the summer and fall of 2016. This training will be interactive and engaging, with videos, activities, and group discussion around the epidemic of DMST and what it looks like here in Georgia. The goals of the training are:

- Increase understanding of DMST and Human Trafficking as a whole
- Understand the trauma, abuse and victimization of DMST
- Understand manipulation tactics used by traffickers
- Become familiar with warning signs that trafficking victims might display
- Increase knowledge of community intervention and services available to victims
- Learn about how to get involved in the fight against DMST

As invested members of the Diocese of Atlanta, this training will educate you on the research related to DMST, the victimization of these children, statistics in Georgia, and will prepare you to spread awareness and teach others. Our hope is that after the training, you will be mobilized to act and move towards combatting this horrific crime. Whether you choose to tell one person about what you learned, or you volunteer to serve victims after this training, your individual impact will make a difference.

Join us to learn about this form of modern day slavery and what you and your convocation can do to make an impact!
